

The people walking in darkness
have seen a great light;
on those living in the land of deep darkness
a light has dawned. Isaiah 9:2

'This Advent, everyone is waiting. Alongside Christians waiting expectantly to celebrate the birth of the Saviour, the world waits to be saved from COVID-19. Both forms of waiting use the same language: of 'light breaking through'. When the first promising signs from vaccine trials emerged, the Deputy Chief Medical Officer for England offered a metaphor of light in the distance:

'This... is like a train journey where you're standing on the station – it's wet, windy, it's horrible – and two miles down the tracks, two lights appear and it's the train. And it's a long way off. We're at that point now.' The message was clear: even if we are still currently in darker times, we can see the first signs of hope and light to come. Similarly in Isaiah 9:2, we find the prophecy of the greatest light, transforming the lives of those walking in darkness. This verse features in Christmas readings but...there are layers to this future promise. Some interim answers come through human kings and rulers, but the full brightness of Isaiah 9 is supremely fulfilled in Jesus. If the birth of Jesus represents the light dawning, his life, death, and resurrection add more brightness. When Jesus returns, the brightness will be unmissable and unmistakable, and all forms of darkness will have passed away. In the meantime, we wait, but not passively. From our vantage point, today, we have seen enough to trust, even in dark times. Whilst we wait, whilst everyone is waiting, may we brighten the places where we find ourselves. May we reflect the light of Jesus in our everyday contexts such that others might see and believe.'
