

'My dear brothers and sisters, take note of this: everyone should be quick to listen, slow to speak and slow to become angry' (James 1:19)

'According to John Stott, 'Christian witnesses stand between the Word and the world, with the consequent obligation to listen to both.' Most of us already see the need to listen to God, but there's just as much obligation to listen to the world. To answer before hearing the question, waiting for the opportunity to make our point, is folly, and risks rendering the gospel irrelevant. When we listen to people, to their fears and longings, we're motivated to discern how best to share the good news of Christ in a way that offers meaningful responses. Not only does listening lead us to speak better words, but it also gives us the opportunity to meet God where we might not expect to find him. We listen to a neighbour and sense the Spirit moving in their life, or discover God's comforting presence in stories of pain and loss. Where might there be an opportunity to join in the work he's already started?

We listen humbly to learn from the wisdom of the world around us. We listen prayerfully with the help of the Spirit, to discern what's going on beneath the surface. And we listen patiently which takes time. As David Augsburger put it, 'Being heard is so close to being loved that, for the average person, they are almost indistinguishable.' So let's love our colleagues, friends, and family by asking wise questions: what are their hurts, hopes, and struggles, and how might the gospel meet their deepest needs?

Through listening, may you clearly present the much-needed riches of Christ on your frontline this week.'
