

'The more I reflect on Jesus' parables, the more I like the word "scandalous" to describe the mathematics of the gospel. I believe Jesus gave us these stories about grace in order to call us to step completely outside our tit-for-tat world of ungrace and enter into God's realm of infinite grace. As Miroslav Volf puts it, "the economy of undeserved grace has primacy over the economy of moral deserts."

From nursery school onward we are taught how to succeed in the world of ungrace. The early bird gets the worm. No pain, no gain. There is no such thing as a free lunch. Demand your rights. Get what you pay for. I know these rules well because I live by them. I work for what I earn; I like to win; I insist on my rights. I want people to get what they deserve—nothing more, nothing less. Yet if I care to listen, I hear a loud whisper from the gospel that I did not get what I deserved. I deserved punishment and got forgiveness. I deserved wrath and got love. I deserved debtors' prison and got instead a clean credit history. I deserved stern lectures and crawl-on-your-knees repentance; I got a banquet spread for me.'

The target of spending 0.7 per cent of national income on aid was established as a UN development spending goal in 1970. Since 2002, largely under pressure from British churches, successive Governments have committed to it. In 2015, with all party support, the UK became the first G7 country to enshrine it in law. From 2010-15, British aid supported 11 million children through school, bought 47 million bed nets – which have contributed to malaria deaths falling by 60 per cent over the last 15 years – and supported over 60 million people to access clean water, better sanitation, or improved hygiene conditions. Despite near-universal opposition from Christian charities and politicians, the Chancellor confirmed the Government would be cutting foreign aid by £4.4bn. After a heated debate, during which Rishi Sunak appeared to quote from the Bible, Stephen Timms MP asks why the government didn't listen: As a Christian MP I had to vote against Rishi Sunak's proposal to cut foreign aid | Opinion | Premier Christianity

The Archbishop of York, Stephen Cottrell, has praised "the creativity of local churches, in... managing, not just to sustain a life of worship but also ... of care and service to their local communities, without the normal trappings." We must not go back to normal once this is all over: "normal has been killing the planet, normal has meant most were working too many hours, making too many unnecessary journeys. There's lots that we have learned from this – (although) this pandemic is ...the most terrible thing that I've experienced in my lifetime by a long, long way, that doesn't mean God can't bring good out of it."

As we move forward let's look to what God is bringing to Ryde through us.
